But the most remarkable point in the transaction is that it has been ascertained that Mr. Washburn, who was supposed to be several times a millionaire, is reduced to the comparatively small for the comparative compa corporation that has since been manthe comparatively small fortune of $400,-000. Of course it is not stated that the Independent.]-Although the eyes of Libprincipal portion of his fortune went to erty's sons, all over our broad land, are the cormorants of the Minnesota legisla- strained to their utmost tension as they

It shows the effect of the hot race for office, wherein personal pride and all the wealth the candidate can command are staked for a paltry prize. If the charge of corrupt use of money in the canvass was unjustly made, the effect upon a sensitive nature would be serious, and in some cases disastrons. the effect upon a sensitive nature would be serious, and in some cases disastrous, as the ridicule that was cast upon Horace Greeley during the presidential campaign of 1872 undoubtedly did much to hasten the death of that singularly incongruous man. The temporary physical collapse of Mr. Hoadley at the close of his second canvass for the governorship of Ohio, is another case in point, which goes to show the unnatural strain to which candidates for office are subjected. But in spite of these examples subjected. But in spite of these examples there will always be an abundance of candidates for every office, from president down to pound-master, all of whom are willing to take the chances of winning or of sinking all the means winning or of sinking all the means pies.

Why, then, it may be asked, should there where the work of the country of the count

DOUBLE LEGISLATURES.

The discussion in the Dakotas regarding the proposition to abolish the double legislative feature is likely to come to haught, the advocates of the innovation being few in number and lacking in the being few in number and lacking in the same as wisdom and human foresight go, ought to be a sufficient safeguard to prevent naught, the advocates of the innovation being few in number and lacking in the ability to create a following. There is, however, much to be said in favor of the abolition of the so-called upper chamber in state and national legislatures. In England the house of lords, which represents the hereditary aristocracy and nothing else, is tottering to its fall, and fifty years hence, it may be predicted, there will be only the commons and the crown or that which, in a constitutional monarchy, stands for the crown, which is the ministry, a body directly responsible to the people—far more so, in fact, than is the president in the form of government under which we live. Under a properly adjusted electoral system, it would be very rarely indeed that the senate and the house of representatives would not be in accord on the questions which divide parties either in the state or the nation, and it is not rational to elect one body to watch rational to elect one body to watch another, as is the theory of the two houses of state legislatures. The time has not yet come perhaps time has not yet come, perhaps, for passing. full recognition of the absurdity of this matter, but it will surely come, and Ayer's Hair Vigor has long held the first when it does "the senate must go," so | place as a hair dressing in the estimation far as state legislatures are concerned. of the public. The subject of abolition of the state senate was before the Ohio constitutional convention of 1850, when D. A.
